The Debate Starts Here

On Sept. 26, The University of Mississippi hosts the first presidential debate of 2008. The debate is yet another historic event in the life of Ole Miss, where opportunities and experiences are not just life-enhancing but also life-changing; where fostering new ideas is paramount; and where "not possible" becomes "anything is possible" every day. Ole Miss is an appropriate place for hosting the first presidential debate — an unfettered flow of ideas and opinions about domestic policy that will guide the nation into the future. Get ready, because the debate starts here.

In mid-May a volunteer application form will be posted on the university's debate Web site at <http://debate.olemiss.edu>. If you are a member of this Facebook group, you'll receive a message when the form is available.

The Provost's Office invites UM faculty and academic departments to submit proposals for debate-related activities. If you are teaching a course and have added content relevant to the debate or debate topics, send the course code and a description of how it is incorporating information related to the debate to Dr. Noel Wilkin at nwilkin@olemiss.edu. If you've already scheduled an event that is related to domestic issues and would like it listed on the debate Web site, send Dr. Wilkin the date, time, location, and description of the event. All submissions will be reviewed and approved by the coordinating committee before posting on the debate Web site.

The Presidential Debate Student Steering Committee is seeking input from Ole Miss students on ideas and events related to the debate. See the story at http://www.olemiss.edu/debate/debate_news/details.php?id=12.
