Fiber For Oxford

The screenshot shows a web browser window with the URL <http://fiberforoxford.com/>. The page features a header with the title "Fiber For Oxford" where the words are connected by stylized, multi-colored lines (red, green, blue, yellow) that resemble fiber optic cables. Below the header is a navigation menu with links: Home, News, About this Campaign, About Oxford, and Contact Us. To the right of the menu are social media icons for Facebook, Twitter, and RSS.

The main content area has a red vertical banner on the left that says "Get Involved!". The primary headline is "Let's Bring Google Fiber to Oxford". Below this headline is a photograph of a brick building with a porch and hanging plants. To the right of the main text is a sidebar with three sections: "SEARCH THIS SITE" with a search input field, "RECENT NEWS" with a list of links, and "PARTNERS/SPONSORS" with logos for Ole Miss and another organization.

Let's Bring Google Fiber to Oxford

Google is planning to launch an experiment that we hope will make Internet access better and faster for everyone. Through fiber-to-the-home connections, Google's proposed network would offer Internet speeds of over 1 gigabit per second, which is more than 100 times faster than what most Americans have access to today. They asked cities across the nation to tell Google why they should be chosen.

Oxford would be the perfect place for Google to test this groundbreaking service. Let's get together as a community and help convince Google that Oxford is where they need to test their ultra high speed broadband fiber lines!

Stranded leader runs country by iPad

April 16, 2010 11:39 a.m. EDT

A photograph of Jens Stoltenberg, the Prime Minister of Norway, sitting in a yellow armchair in a hotel lobby. He is wearing a dark suit and glasses, looking down at an iPad he is holding in his hands. His right hand is resting on his forehead. The background shows a carpeted floor, a lamp, and a plant.

- Apple's new device is "excellent" Stoltenberg says

(CNN) -- Running a country? There's an app for that.

When Norway's prime minister found himself stuck in New York as a volcanic cloud grounded flights to Europe, he fired up his new Apple iPad and did the job remotely.

In what could be a first for the new gadget, Jens Stoltenberg told CNN he used the iPad to manage the situation at home as Norway closed its airspace under threat from the ash.
